

Capstone Project: HR Attrition and Employee Retention Satisfaction

Understanding and Mitigating
Employee Turnover

MINIMIZING EMPLOYEE ATTRITION

Every time a talented employee walks out our door, they take more than just their laptop. They take institutional knowledge, client relationships, and team morale.

Employee Count

Data Source: IBM Watson HR Analytics Dataset (1,470 anonymized employee records tracking 35 workforce variables)

Key Finding #1: Departmental Attrition

Sales recorded the highest attrition rate at 20.63%, significantly exceeding other departments and highlighting specific retention challenges within this group.

Attrition by Department

Key Finding #2: Employee Demographics

Attrition was concentrated among newer and younger employees (0 - 2 years), suggesting potential issues with onboarding, early career development, or initial job fit.

Statistical Validation

Test	Variables Compared	Null Hypothesis (H ₀)	P-value	α	Decision	Interpretation
Chi-Square Test of Independence	Overtime vs Attrition	No association between overtime and attrition	8.16×10^{-21}	0.05	Reject H ₀	Overtime status is strongly associated with employee attrition
Independent 2-Sample T-Test	Monthly income (Stayed vs Left)	No difference in mean income between groups	4.43×10^{-13}	0.05	Reject H ₀	Employees who left have significantly different (lower) average income than those who stayed
Market Alignment: External benchmarks show a higher industry standard for Sales pay. This mirrors our T-test results, confirming that under-compensated roles face a severe market flight risk.

Actionable Recommendations

Reduce Overtime: Implement strict monitoring and management guardrails for teams facing chronic overtime

Improve Compensation: Review salary structures to ensure competitiveness.

Strengthen Onboarding: Revamp onboarding support, specifically in Sales, to stabilize our highest-risk retention zone

Quarterly Reviews: Integrate Looker Studio dashboard into quarterly strategy meetings.

Conclusion

By shifting from reactive hiring to proactive retention, we are not just saving cost—we are protecting our company's most valuable asset: "OUR PEOPLE."
